The Foundation of the American Theatre Critics Association is a public, non-profit 501 © (3) corporation created in 1991 as the charitable arm of the American Theatre Critics

Association. Through its endowments and other funds, The Foundation provides material supporting for the continuing growth of the nation's theater and its literature as well as the development of the critical profession. ATCA is America's only national organization for professional theater critics, with nearly 300 members across the country.

Grant requests are considered as they arise, but of course the foundation board needs some time to work, so please allow as much as possible. The award of a grant is contingent on being accepted for the seminar or symposium, but it does not guarantee a place – that's up to IATC.
